TAKEN A TRIP TO THE TEN CONTEST CATALOGUE STARS?

If You Have, You Have Found Ten of the Seventy-seven Correct Book Titles! Have you found the ten stars in the catalogue? They are not opposite the correct book titles, and you'll find them plainly printed in the catalogue. Of course, the seventy-seven correct book titles are to be found among the 5,000 titles in the catalogue, and the ten stars mark ten of the correct titles. That leaves only sixty-seven correct titles for you to find by yourself. Pretty handy thing to have around.

NEWS OF CHATHAM

Chatham, August 3.—The regular July term of Pittsylvania County Circuit Court adjourned Friday afternoon.

A special term of Circuit Court will be held on August 11, when Beverly W. Jones, distiller of whiskey in the county, near Pinks Mill, will be required to show why his license should not be revoked. A special grand jury at the term just adjourned investigated the firm generally known as the Fall Creek Shipping Company, which has been doing an extensive business in shipping whiskey from Fall Creek, and the following were indicted for selling whiskey without license: W. G. Garrett, on two counts; Bud Earles, one count; William Crane, one count; Charles M. Hutcherson, two counts; Garrett and Earles have left for parts unknown. Hutcherson is now in jail in default of a $2,000 bond for his appearance at the September term of Circuit Court. Crane is in jail in default of bond for his appearance at the September term.

As the primary date draws near the political contest in Chatham is being indulged as to the result, particularly as to the House of Delegates. C. W. Anderson and C. R. Warren have declared themselves for the Democratic enabling act, and the County Anti-Saloon League, in meeting here last, passed a resolution calling on the voters to support the candidates favorable to the enabling act.

On Thursday of next week an election on the whiskey question will be held in this place, in which much interest is felt by the business people generally, but no demonstration has been made. If the opposition to the application for license to sell whiskey in Chatham heard at the May term of Circuit Court is any indication, the town will be a dry town. The voting strength of the town for this election is about 130.

The women's meeting of the Roanoke Baptist Association will meet with the church at Alta Vista on August 5 and 6. The church is but a short distance from the depot, and with good railroad facilities, the meeting will in all probability be well attended.

The Roanoke Baptist Association will on Tuesday, August 12, meet at the Hollywood Church, about six miles west of this place. All delegates coming by rail will be met at this place.

COWES HEADQUARTERS OF ENGLISH SOCIETY

It Also Will Be Centre of Fashion and Seat of Government.

BY LA MARQUE DE FONTENAY.

COWES, during the next eight or ten days, will be not only the headquarters of English society and the centre of fashion, but likewise the seat of government of the vast British Empire. For King George, with Queen Mary, is living on his yacht, the Victoria and Albert, anchored off Cowes, and it is on board that superb boat that he is transacting all his multifarious business, in connection with the affairs of state, signing the hundreds of papers submitted to him each day by the Cabinet, and the centre of government of the vast British Empire. For King George, with Queen Mary, is living on his yacht, the Victoria and Albert, anchored off Cowes, and it is on board that superb boat that he is transacting all his multifarious business, in connection with the affairs of state, signing the hundreds of papers submitted to him each day by the Cabinet, and the centre of government of the vast British Empire.

What distinguishes the race week at Cowes from all others is its exclusiveness, and the absence not merely of the general public, but likewise of all those hangers-on who may be described as the fringe of society. The Royal Yacht Squadron, the premier yacht club of the world in point of seniority and importance—blackballs most unmercifully candidates who in any way do not conform to the breeding requisite to render them congenial associates, and as one blackball is sufficient to exclude a candidate, the Royal Yacht Squadron "fills" candidates even when they have been sponsored by the sovereign himself—Edward VII. having failed in all his attempts to secure the election of Sir Thomas Lipton. It is, moreover, extremely chary about according the privileges of the club temporarily to strangers, even when they arrive there in royal yachts flying the flags of the principal foreign yachting organizations.

Now, to be at Cowes during the Cowes week, and to be excluded from the club, especially from the club grounds, which constitute the centre of all social activity and fashion throughout the regatta week—is to expose oneself to the humiliation of the ostracism. People thus discriminated against are "out of the club," and, so to speak, invite attention to the fact, if they are foolish enough to persist in remaining. Few are bold enough to expose themselves to this treatment, and most prefer to stay away on some pretext or other.

One of the features of the week will be the annual dinner of the Royal Yacht Squadron at the club, under the presidency of its admiral-in-chief, the King, assisted by the commodore and working president of the club, the Marquis of Ormonde, a familiar figure on this side of the Atlantic. Alfonso XIII., who is at Cowes on board his steam yacht, with his consort, also Prince Henry of Prussia, and several other royals, will be among the guests, though not Prince Paul of Serbia, who has returned to Belgrade, very much affronted by the marked manner in which he has been ignored during the past season by the King, the Queen, and the entire royal family. When he first came to England, he was most kindly received by the King and Queen, who were disposed to be very friendly towards him, in view of the fact that he was to be a fellow student of their son, the Prince of Wales, at Oxford. But he got into the hands of a fast set in London, of people of whom neither the King nor the Queen could approve, and went the pace. Indiscretions that had never been treated with more indulgence if perpetrated by scions of reigning houses whose royalty was more firmly established than that of the swineherd descended Serbian dynasty were resented in his case, and as English society in the long run always takes its cue from the sovereigns, Prince Paul ended by finding London no longer congenial, and took his departure before the end of the season.

The Royal Yacht Squadron is the only yachting club the members of which have the privilege of flying the white ensign of English men-of-war—a right denied to honorary members—and of making use of the royal bays and wharves. It has a number of other important royal prerogatives bestowed upon it in turn by George IV., William IV., Queen Victoria and King Edward. Founded in 1812, as indicated by its seal, it held the first of its annual dinners in 1815, the Waterloo year, at the Thatched House Tavern, 101, St. James's Street, London, with Lord Grantham in the chair. For some years afterwards, the dinners, meetings and elections took place at the Medina Hotel, in East Cowes, then at the Gloucester Hotel, West Cowes, until late when it moved to the Victoria Hotel, of Cowayham, commodore of the squadron. It acquired the old castle at Cowes, which has ever since been the headquarters, commanding a splendid view up and down the Solent.

One of the rules of the Royal Yacht Squadron, which keeps lots of people from becoming members, is that which requires candidates for election to be practical yachtsmen, possessed of diplomas as sailing masters, and capable of navigating their own boat. King Edward endeavored to have this rule amended so as to admit the election of men who, while not yachtsmen in the technical sense of the word, have, nevertheless, by their ownership of yachts, and by the devotion of their spare time to the construction of racing craft, contributed in an important and effective manner to this branch of sport. But the club has never been willing to give way in this respect to blackball last year, in particularly overwhelming fashion, a duke, of stormy antecedents, who is a frequent visitor to America, and whose name it is needless to mention.

From a reader I receive an inquiry as to the origin of the Scotch Highland garb, which will be worn for the next week by the members of the Englishmen, but likewise by a number of Americans, sojourning north of the Tweed, for the sake of the shooting. The earliest distinct allusion to the kilt is found in the Norse sagas, in which it is related that that monarch, on his return from his great expedition through the Hebrides, was "triumphing" to have adopted, and then introduced into Norway, the dress—even then described as ancient—worn by the Highlanders of the Western Isles. It consisted of a mantle and kilt, the latter, "brochan" and "faklunn," or plaid and kilt, the legs being uncovered. From his adoption of this Scottish Highland garb, with its bare legs, King Magnus in 1153, all represent these rulers of Scotland in what is known as the Highland garb, and I believe that there is sculptured evidence tending to show that the costume had been in use during the previous hundred years previously.

George IV. was the first of the British sovereigns since the days of the union to don the kilt—on the occasion of his state visit to Edinburgh, when he was to be seen taking a leading part in welcoming him. William IV. never wore it. But Queen Victoria, who was passionately fond of Scotland, insisted from the time when she established her Highland home at Balmoral, that the Prince Consort and all other members of her family should wear nothing but Highland dress when in Scotland. Even her German relatives were compelled to do it, and some of them were wont to complain bitterly of the rheumatism with which they became afflicted thereby, and of the discomfort of the kilt when rendered additionally heavy by Scotch rain and drizzle. There is nothing more understood than that there is no manner born to a wet kilt, which has a way of cutting the inside of the knee.

King George and his sons, and the Duke of Connaught, as Prince Arthur, always wear the kilt north of the Tweed. But King Edward abandoned the practice during the closing years of his reign; nor did he insist upon the members of his household being thus garbed when at Balmoral. BEAUTIFUL DANCE AT CHASE CITY

German Given in Honor of the Belles of the Town.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Chase City, Va., August 2.—The most enjoyable event of the season was the German given Friday evening by the young men of town in honor of the young ladies of the town and the visiting girls. The German was held in the large new pavilion on North Main Street. The place was decorated for the occasion with beautiful Japanese lanterns and streamers. Music was furnished by an orchestra from Raleigh, N. C., which was seated behind large ferns, and to this accompaniment, waltzes, two steps and some of the fancy dances were beautifully executed. Some pretty German figures were danced. The floor presented a lovely scene as the young people danced to and fro. Dancing was particularly in to a late hour. About fifty couples participated in the dance. Among those dancing were:

Miss Isabelle Norvell with R. Sidney Brooks; Miss Elsie Edmunds with J. D. Brooks; Miss Mary and sister with D. Brooks; Miss Margaret Boswell with Mr. Garrett; Miss Mamie Jeffreys, with P. L. Geoghegan; Miss Seal Gregg, with H. P. Jeffreys; Miss Lizzie Roberts with Charles Reynolds; Miss Gladys Roberts with Edward Gregory; Miss Robertson, of Richmond, with Page Pettus; Miss Fitzgerald, of Richmond, with Wesley Eubank; Miss Irene Thornton with Mr. Wrightworth; Miss Homes, of Boynton, with Richard Boyd, of Richmond; Miss Lullie Baskerville, of Boynton, with G. Vincent Wood; Miss Bates, of Brookline, with A. H. Robertson; Miss Kattie Roberts, of Clarksville, with John Russell; Miss Margaret Hardy with Edward Brooks; Miss Russell, of Clarksville, with Mr. Homes; Mrs. W. W. W. with Mr. F. Taylor, of Petersburg, with Mr. Walker.

The stars were: A. L. Jeffreys, Mr. Lee, of Norfolk; W. H. Owen, Mr. Hutcheson, of Boynton; S. P. Reams, S. C. Brennan, Captain J. W. Goode, U. S. A.; Frank Redinger, of Boynton, Va. The chaperons were Mrs. Cora Wallace and Mrs. Hardy.
